Joint Chiefs of staff and openly urges that they be replaced. the subject hardly can be ignored.

Perhaps the British or Canadian parliamentary system were in David Lawrence operation in the United States today, there also would be suggestions that President Kennedy himself be replaced or at least subjected to the customary vote of "confidence" or "no confidence.

It should be noted that Sen. Gore made his comment after listening to a substantial part of the three hours of testimony given to a subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee last Friday by Gen. Lyman Lemnitzer, head of the joint chiefs.

Since this testimony was secret, the public has no way of judging whether Sen. Gore's interpretation is justified. Other senators who heard the testimony disagree emphatically with the Tennessee senator's verdict.

Where is the press left in these circumstances, and how is the country to know the whole truth? Obviously, while Gen. Lemnitzer answered questions frankly and listening senators are convinced he gave them truthful answers, it was obvious to them there were many things that he was not privileged to discuss. Also Allen Dulles, head of the Central Intelligence Agency, previously had given the senate committee his explanation of the affair.

This, too, was secret, and the press still has no way of judging just who was or was not responsible for what happened in Cuba. How then can the public make up its own mind? Recently there have been suggestions from President Kennedy that perhaps there should be censorship of the voluntary kind for the press but isn't it the duty of the press to tell the people when top ranking officials in government, including the President himself, have made some serious mistakes?

A MEMBER of Congress familiar with the facts, but himself not a participant, sums it all up. with this remark: "It was a case of cumulative stupidity.'

This correspondent would point out, however, that it was a case sibility for the project. of an unprecedented nature for which neither the President nor the Congress has had occasion be President Kennedy, who is heretofore to delegate or fix re- studying now, through Gen. blames the failure on the military operation.

It came so near success anyway that it is easy now to blame this or that circumstance. And, of course, hindsight is always better than foresight.

One important factor has not been fully explained. An American aircraft carrier was 10 mies away from the landing point. At a crucial moment American air support was needed. It had been promised. When it was called for by the Cubans, it didn't materialize.

Was this because of faulty communication between the Cuban expedition and Washington? Was there a lapse of several hours while civilian advisers of the President, who argued against the idea, caused him to hesitate and ultimately to decline to authorize air support?

IT'S ALL ACADEMIC now but it does seem the President might have looked at the plan more penetratingly himself in the first

Maybe he relied on the military staff here to pick flaws in it for him, and they didn't feel qualified to pass judgment on what the Cubans were doing and what the CIA was doing.

It's a kind of situation that is new to the American government, especially since, on the one hand, it was strictly a Cuban affair and, on the other, it was so much the concern of the United States that it seems tragic the decision wasn't made either to go all out with air support and everything else or stay out altogether. That's perhaps hindsight, too.

It would be unfortunate to start looking for scapegoats. Significantly, Sen. Morse, chairman of the senate subcommittee which heard Gen. Lemnitzer's testimony, said afterward to reporters that the general had given helpful testimony, and added:

"I have complete confidence in their ability to protect the security of the country in connection with any military matter over which they have complete jurisdiction."

Reading between the lines, this is but another way of emphasizing the real point of the controversy-namely, that the Cuban invasion was not a strictly military affair which our own military men planned and executed. It was a mixture of civilian hesitancy-due to a fear of public opinion in Latin America-and forbearance by the military chiefs who were never given full respon-
